
Test Day Briefing

What to bring, what's banned, how the paper is sealed and submitted, and what gets a paper thrown out. Drawn directly from the official MUR candidate regulations.

Before you go

Nothing here decides your score. Getting it wrong can still cost you the exam before you've answered a single question.

- Bring valid photo ID.

A passport or national ID card. Without it, you cannot sit the test.

- Bring nothing else you don't need.

Coats and personal belongings go in the cloakroom, not at your desk.

- Arrive with time to spare.

Room assignment, ID checks, and the box-integrity ritual (see the submission page) all happen before the clock starts.

Why this matters more than it sounds

None of this is optional or negotiable on the day. A missing ID or a phone left in your pocket isn't a warning, it's grounds for the paper to be voided outright. Sort the logistics days before, not the morning of.

Banned in the exam room

Bringing or using any of the following is grounds for immediate paper annulment.

- Mobile phones, smartphones, PDAs
- Smartwatches and tablets
- Earphones or webcams
- Your own pens, pencils, or any stationery, only the black pen provided by the test venue may be used
- Textbooks, printed material, or any partial reproduction of them
- Handwritten notes, blank paper, or reference material of any kind

Not a warning system

There's no "put it away" step for these. Having a banned item on you, whether or not you actually use it, is enough by itself for the paper to be annulled.

How the paper actually works

Marking an answer

Mark your chosen answer with an X in the box (draw diagonals across it).

Correcting an answer

You may correct one, and only one, answer per question. Fully black out the original X, then mark the new one. Only one clearly marked box counts.

Leaving a question blank

The form has a small circle next to each question for you to cross out if you deliberately choose not to answer. Once marked, it cannot be undone. An unmarked blank is still scored as no answer.

The part candidates miss

A second correction on the same question isn't a gray area, only one box per question is ever read as your answer. If you're not confident, decide before you mark, not after.

End-of-test submission

At the end of the test you move to a dedicated station. This sequence matters as much as anything you did in the 100 minutes before it.

- Choose one matching pair of adhesive barcode labels. Check both codes match.
- Apply one label to your personal data sheet and the other to your answer sheet. You are solely responsible for this, verify the codes yourself.
- Sign the declaration on your personal data sheet confirming your details and that the label codes match.
- Place your personal data sheet into its sealed box.
- Place your answer sheet into its sealed box face down, answers facing downward.

Do not touch a pen here

Do not use a pen at this station to alter, add to, or correct your answer sheet. Doing so voids your paper, at the exact moment you're done and it's tempting to fix one last thing.

What automatically voids your paper

No partial credit, no warning, no appeal on the day. The following result in annulment, no score is calculated.

- ✗ Sitting in a room other than the one you were assigned to, without authorization
- ✗ Bringing or using any banned item
- ✗ Signing or marking your answer sheet, front or back, by you or anyone else
- ✗ Interacting with another candidate, or attempting to copy or exchange any material, including data sheets or answer sheets
- ✗ Using a pen to alter your answer sheet during the final sealing or submission step
